

BROOKLYN'S MANY NEEDS.

"Evening World" Readers Point Them Out in Detail.

Suggestions That Tend to Improve the City of Churches.

Stop Smoking and Smoking.
E. H. Jones—Stop swearing and vice, foul language by boys and men in the public streets of this city. Ventilate and stop smoking in the Brooklynerry houses.

The East River Bridge.
GREENSBIE—It is my opinion that nothing will ever improve Brooklyn as much as the new East River Bridge will do when it is finished. And if the population increases, the streets streetcleaning, sewers, gas, railroads and trade generally must improve, and will be improved to New York City in my better way.

Streets and Ash Pots.

CHRISTIAN CRICKSHACK—I think the best way to improve Brooklyn and all other cities would be to have all the streets cleaned and have a regular dump name, so that the ash barrels could be emptied every day, then there would not be so much contagion disease, and the people would be satisfied; I guess they would not want to many decorations.

Ocular and Nasal Needs.

J. C.—A rapidly growing city like Brooklyn always requires a great many improvements and the means of accomplishing them is to have city officials who will be thoughtful and enterprising in carrying them out, as every citizen is about his own private business. Brooklyn is in the city with a very nice residential residences and a great many fine business concerns, but who, traveling through it, will not observe the wretched, dilapidated, dirt-covered buildings in various places. Along the river front or away in the outskirts of the city where factories rear their malignant heads before the eyes, it is a sight to behold, and the stench out of a mixture of heaps of dirt, bad pavement, horrible abodes for third, prolific humanity, streets blocked up, trees, etc., etc., etc., in a state of decay and degradation on its face. This should not be so, and if it is not so, then Brooklyn needs more than anything else an ocular and nasal deodorant to set it. It looks like a city like a city, and is a city.

Broadway and Non-alcoholism.

This city of Brooklyn sadly needs some intelligent system for naming the streets and avenues in it, to prevent persons straying miles from their destination and from having the same names for streets and avenues which are respectively miles apart, like Union street and Union avenue, Grand street and Grand avenue, Franklin street and Franklin avenue, Meserole street and Meserole avenue, Washington street and Washington avenue, and very many more. Then again, we find that Willoughby avenue is a continuation of Willoughby street. Fulton avenue of Fulton street, and it is not the business of the Police, the Streets, or any other department of the city to see that it is not so, then Brooklyn needs more than anything else an ocular and nasal deodorant to set it. It looks like a city like a city, and is a city.

TOOK HIM FOR A BRIGAND.

Palgrave Simpson's Appearance Frightened a Woman.

Among the many stories that Palgrave Simpson told me, says a writer, was one about his first start as a dramatist. He used to live in Brompton after his return from Paris, where he had been a pupil of the great Scribe. He was of striking appearance, with long black hair and a mustache, and used to wear a cloak.

During his walks abroad he came across a lady who seemed to shrink from him as she feared him.

One day he was passing by Thurloe Square and gave a penny to a crossing-sweeper, and, hearing a cry of astonishment, turned sharply around. The exclamation came from the opposite side of the road. It emanated from the lad who had so frequently exhibited signs of apoplexy at his approach, and who now seemed astounded at his little act of philanthropy.

Soon after this meeting, armed with a letter of introduction, he took a place in a theatre in the Strand, to read one of his plays. The author did his best and the reading went off well. At the conclusion the manager said:

"And now, Mr. Simpson, you must allow me to introduce you to my mother."

"I shall be delighted," said Palgrave.

He had entered the room, and his friend recognized the stranger in him.

"This Mr. Palgrave Simpson, who has been reading me a most amusing farce," said the manager.

The lady appeared to be in the last stages of apoplexy.

"Good gracious!" she exclaimed; "why is it the benevolent brigand?"
